The Markets

It's almost over...

During July 2016, Pew Research reported almost 60 percent of Americans were suffering from election fatigue. They weren't uninterested in the election. They were just worn out by never-ending news coverage that focused on candidates' comments, personal lives, and standing in the polls rather than their moral character, experience, and stance on issues.

Avoid Surprise Medical Bills by Following this Prescription

Take the time to kick the tires on your health insurance choices during open enrollment - it could help you reduce the chances of a surprise medical bill.

Over the past year, 20 percent of working Americans have had a problem paying medical bills, according to a survey from the Kaiser Family Foundation. Many of those stemmed from unexpected bills: For 26 percent, it was a claim their insurer denied, and for 32 percent, a surprise bill from an out-of-network health-care provider.

(The survey polled 2,575 adults in the fall of 2015, with a margin of error of plus or minus 3 percentage points.)
