The Markets

Isn't it remarkable that China's growth is so consistent?

A columnist from The Washington Post once opined that China "produces an astonishing number of astonishing numbers." Last week's GDP announcement, which helped push markets higher, may fall into that category.

China's official statistics agency reported the country's gross domestic product (GDP) grew by 6.7 percent during the first quarter of 2016. That didn't come as a big surprise because it's smack-dab-in-the-middle of the official Chinese government target of 6.5 to 7.0 percent GDP growth. The target was set last year when the government adopted its most recent five-year plan.

Referring family and friends is the best compliment you can pay us.

Imagine this: Your 19-year-old daughter is away at college, driving the car you bought her a few years ago. The car is titled in your name. She causes a five-car pileup. She is OK, and no one else is seriously injured. However, three separate lawsuits are filed against you as the car owner. As if this wasn't enough, another person, who simply witnessed the accident, files a lawsuit against you for negligent infliction of emotional distress, seeking damages of $150,000.

This scenario may sound far-fetched, but it's not. A friend of mine is going through it right now.
